Nudie Jeans Climate Policy

INTRODUCTION

Nudie Jeans endeavors to reduce our emissions in our full supply chain in line with the 1.5 degree pathway. Climate change and its consequences are of high concern to Nudie Jeans, as our entire business relies on access to raw materials and resources from healthy ecosystems and strong biodiversity. We depend on thriving local societies and environments in our global supply chain.

COMMITMENT

Nudie Jeans' climate work is an integrated part of our overall sustainability work, where a circular flow of resources and transparency in the supply chain are also motivating forces for successful climate initiatives. Nudie Jeans' membership in the Swedish Textile Initiative for Climate Action (STICA) places our work and commitment in a larger textile context, and we follow the Green House Gas Protocol as a standard and guidance to measure and manage our greenhouse gas emissions, with 2018 as our base year.

Nudie Jeans is committed to continuously mapping all of our greenhouse gas emissions from scope 1, 2, and 3. We are committed to setting Science-Based Targets in line with the 1.5 degree pathway, to making clear action plans to reduce emissions where possible, and to working with both carbon offsetting and insetting of the remaining greenhouse gas emissions generated by our business.

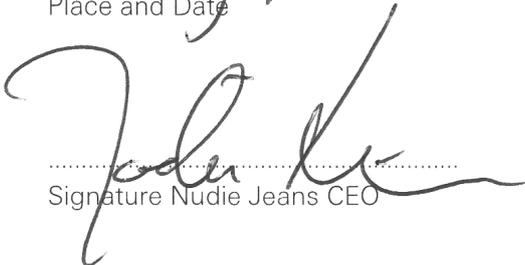

One of the main changes we need to see in our supply chain is the transition from the use of energy from fossil-fuel-based sources to energy from renewable sources.

We are actively working to decrease the climate impact in the user phase of our garments by continuing to scale up and develop our circular activities. These include prolonging the life of our garments through our repair services, offering secondhand garments and increasing the use of recycled fibers, both from our own collected garments and through general post and pre-consumer waste.

The climate aspect is included in the Nudie Jeans policy framework from the Sustainable Material Tool to the Sourcing Policy, Code of Conduct, Sustainability Policy and Travel Policy.

The Nudie Jeans board of directors has overall accountability for Nudie Jeans' climate impact and work toward a balanced business, in which carbon-reducing activities play a crucial role.
